American travellers are swarming across the Atlantic so rapidly that the estimate of a steamship agent that there will be 50,000 of them before the season ends is readily believed. Much of their money is emptied into London, where the shopkeepers cater every year more directly for American frade. Business with America is reported in every quarter to be steadily improving. The outgoing steamers are already carrying larger cargoes of freight. The increase of exports from Europe to America renders the operations of the special agent of the Treasury, Mr. L. The chief European event of the week has been the unsatisfactory reply of the Porte to the proposals of the Powers regarding reforms in Armenia. The Powers recommended a new administrative system in Armenia; the substitution of taxcollectors in place of marauding soldiers; the abolition of torture; the organization of proper courts of justice; a new gendarmerie, and the appointment of a commission to supervise the execution of the reform measures, subject to the approval of England, Russia and France. The Sultan declines to consider organic changes or to consent to the appointment of European consular officers empowered to reorganize the courts of justice, but offers to grant a sum for the relief of the Sassoun villagers and promises to release political prisoners who will take the oath of allegiance and give | nitles and academic titles. His reasons are found security for their good behavior. The result of the intervention of the three Powers is the refusal of the Sultan to admit that anything wrong has been done in Armenia, coupled with the benevolent proposal that the victims of the outrages shall give bonds to keep the peace.

The three Ambassadors are now awaiting instructions from their Governments. It is rumored that pressure will be brought to bear upon the Porte by a naval demonstration or otherwise. The Grand Vizier and the military party at Constantinople evidently do not believe coercive measures can be adopted. President Faure's tour through the French provinces has been conducted in bad weather, under unfavorable conditions for exciting popular enthusiasm. His courage is admirable, for it is known that the police were apprehensive of a repetition of the Lyons catastrophe. The Ministry is still backing and filling over the arrangements for the Kiel manoeuvres, and dreading a sudden squall of French wrath, by which they may be capsized. M. Ribot has cancelled all cocial engagements in consequence of the death of his sister, Mme. Lambert, who was run over by a train at Calais and instantly killed. The rumors are partially confirmed that Russia has agreed to issue a loan to provide China with the money needed for the first instalment of the Japanese war indemnity, and is appealing to French financiers for ail. It would be good diplomacy, for it would exalt Russian prestige in Asia, but bad finance, since investors are always timid about taking an interest in politi-

English politics are absolutely stagnant during the holiday week. Lord Rosebery has been yachting, Sir William Harcourt is in retirement, Mr. Balfour bicycling in Gloucestershire, with intervals of golf, and Mr. Chamberlain brooding in silence over the future of a coalition ministry. Mr. Bryce has been talking in Scotland on the agricultural depression, the follies of protective tariffs, temperance and the Armenian outrages. Meanwhile the holiday week has been filled with military pageants and town shows of all kinds. Poor Shah Zada has had all his ideas of Oriental indolence shaken out of him by his arduous campaigning in London. He has gone to a military tournament; seen the Zoo; attended Mahometan service at the Woking Mosque; reviewed the army volunteers at Aldershot; ac- 1 cepted the hospitality of the city at Guildhall; visited the docks; received numerous addresses; particiated in countless functions, and, finally, wound up his London experience with the Alhambra. After a week of such incessant toil, during which he hardly had time to say his prayers, like a good Moslem, and with a tour in the provinces confronting him, he must be inclined to envy the happy fate of the Sultan of Johore, who died in peace and quiet at a London hotel before anybody had found out that he had arrived. He has been the hero of the Whitsuntide holidays, and the people have enjoyed the shows, even when the street traffic was suspended for hours in the heart of the city, as it was on the day of the Guildhall reception. The public enjoyment has been intensified by the announcement that the Ameer had decided that Nasrulla Khan should not visit St. Peters-

The literary women of London have also had their recreation. Sixty women writers have dined at the Criterion, listened to speeches and gloried in their work. The chairman, Miss Adeline Sergeant, considered it a special pleasure to toast the Queen, not in the hackneyed description, "wife, mother," the possessor of all the domestic virtues, but as a woman of business. Mrs. Norman described a future in which there would be many "girls in the Carpathians," and men would be unveiled in novels written by women who knew all about them. This was followed the next night by the dinner of the New Vagabond Club, at Holborn Restaur-and six others occupying seats of honor. It was a brilliant spectacle, with good music, but the women were dumb and allowed Mr. Anthony Hope to speak for them. Mr. Moncure D. Conway presided gracefully, and Mr. Frankfort Moore made a humorous speech, praising women for leaving the Philistines to join the Vagabonds. This was the first ladies' night ever held by this unique club, which has been rebuilt on the foundations first laid by Mr. Philip Bourke Marston, the blind poet

The Berlin press censures the German officials for bestowing the Prusslan Order for Merit upon Mr. Herbert Spencer without ascertaining wheth er he would accept it. He has been consistent in declining it, as he has previously done all digin his books, especially in the chapter on badges and ceremonial institutions, in which titles and decorations are described as marks and products of a militant society.

Sir Henry Irving, while accepting gratefully his title, has considered the congratulatory roundrobin signed by his professional brethren of the Comedie Française as one of the greatest distinctions of his career. The Duke of Aosta, who is soon to marry Princess Hélène of Orleans, divides the time be tween London and Stowe House. The Prince of Wales and other royal personages have called upon him. The approaching wedding is regarded with great interest in London. Her example may set the fashion of Caen lace in preference to Chantilly bobbin for wedding veils. Mr. Gladstone has recovered from his cold and

Sir Henry Irving in "The Bells" and Miss Ellen Terry in "Nance Oldfield" have drawn crowded houses, and ministered to every playgoer's pleasure by their masterly performance, perfect in detail. IRISH WORKMEN IN CONFERENCE. PROCEEDINGS OF THE CORK CONGRESS MARKED

BY DIGNITY AND HARMONY. London, June 8 .- The first congress of the Irish trade unionists, held at Cork, has furnished an admirable contrast, so far as dignity and harmony are concerned, to the English trades congresses. Hitherto the Irish have sent delegates to the English trades councils. At Cork 150 delegates, solely Irish, discussed trade and political questions. was hardly a trace of party or sectarian bitterness. The Socialists made the poorest showing at the congress A Londonderry delegate proposed the usual resolution to nationalize everything, and his motion was seconded by a Belfact man, but an amendment proposed by the president of the Belfast Dublin trade unionists, was adopted, declaring that the ultimate solution of labor problems would be more quickly obtained by effecting pressing reforms, on which a vast majority of workingmen were agreed, than by passing abstract resolutions. The amendment was passed by a vote of 57 to 25. Schemes to promote technical education and other practical questions engaged the attention of the congress.

ON EXHIBITION. London, June 8.-With Ministerial seats for Inverness and Cork vacant, the Government will meet Parliament on the reassembling of that body next week with a majority of only six. As it is probable that the Inverness seat will be captured by the Liberal-Unionists and Northeast Division of Cork will fail to the Parnellites, the immediate prospect is that the jority of two or three to carry the Welsh Church Disestablishment bill, the Local Veto measure, the Irish Land bill and the one-man-one-vote proposal in the six weeks of the session which remain available for actual work. Inasmuch as a feat of this character can only be achieved by rushing business regardless of the niceties of Parliamentary rules, the Cabinet have decided that the adoption of a programme involving cummary application of closure is necessary, and that will be the course pursued. It is understood-in fact, it is semi-officially announcedthat a fixed period will be allowed for debate on each of the important measures mentioned," and that in pursuance of this plan to expedite business all amendments will be ignored, however just or important they may be. In the natural course of affairs, according to this programme, not a single bill on which there is any party contention leaving the House of Commons after the treatment indicated will be permitted to pass the House of Lords.

In these circumstances it is not to be marvelled at that the Liberals are fretting under the ignominy of the position into which the party has been led or driven. The waste of time of which the ma- Observing that there was flagrant tardiness in jority are accused is simply unavoidable, yet the its construction, the Emperor remarked: "I Ministerial members are working harder than does not look as though you could get this work ever. The Conservative-Liberal-Unionist coalition, with the assistance of the Parnellite faction of the Irish party, is continually on the alert and in readiness to seize the first opportunity to defeat the Government, and, realizing this, the Liberal whips are nsisting that the members of the party shall be within halling distance of the House from the beginning until the close of each sitting. Indeed, they are so exacting that each member has been given to understand that no excuse for absence

As this state of affairs has developed a feeling nearly approaching mutiny, especially among the Radicals, who are not too well pleased with many phases of the Rosebery policy, the expectation on all sides is that the Unionists will not delay in taking advantage of the situation, but will promptly and boldly challenge the Government to thow its strength or weakness. Lord Salisbury, Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain have been in consultation within the last day or two as to what form a motion of lack of confidence in the Government shall take. The opponents of Lord Rosebery do not hesitate to attribute the bungling of his administration and his plain failure in the most vital of the issues with which he has had to deal to the bad condition of his mental health; yet, although his friends assert that the Premier has entirely recovered from his recent nervous collapse, it is officially announced to-day that his physicians have advised a prolongation of his vachting

Both Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain are of the opinion that the time is not yet ripe for the Opposition to ask the House to decide against Lord Rosebery, and they therefore propose simply to watch for the moment when a question may arise from which they can snatch success. This being the case, the next few weeks of Parliament will necessarily be replete with interest.

The more that becomes known of the mann and habits of the Afghan Prince Nasrulla Knan the less he is liked. He created a bad impression on Thursday at his reception by the Lord Mayor at the Guildhall, the city dignitaries being thoroughly disgusted with him. When the address of the Corporation was read to him the belewelled barbarian paid not the slightest attention to its delivery, nor did he make any reply to it. The speech which was given to the press purporting to have come from him was really made by Colonel Taibot in his capacity as interpreter. Following this piece of discourtesy the Prince gave a line exhibition of Afghanese manners in his refusal to accept the extended hand of Lady Renals, the wife of the Lord Mayor. His deportment at the table was positively matchless as an example of swinish gluttony. When any of the mysterious dishes served to him failed to please him he would eject mouthful after mouthful of the stuff without the slightest regard to its destination. His favorite page boy, who has accompanied him through his tour, did not go with him to the Guildhall, but remained in a disconsolate attitude on the steps of Dorchester House for some time after his master had de-parted.

The success of the French capitalists in cutting out the English financiers, who have hitherto handled Chinese loans, has produced an epidemic of jealousy and envy in London financial circles.

"JEW-BAITING" ORGANIZATION. Berlin, June 8.—The Emperor has made his final review of the preparatory arrangements for the opening of the Baltic and North Sea Canal, which included a thorough inspection of the waterway from Kiel to Brünsbüttel. He left Berlin on special train at an early hour this morning, and reached Kiel at 8 o'clock. All of the chiefs of the Admiralty were awaiting his arrival and had a steam pinnace at his disposal. The Kaiser expressed his preference for a smaller boat, and there was a slight delay in procuring one. The boat to his liking having been brought, the Em peror shouted "Good morning" to its erew, and stepped on board. The boat was manned by six stout earsmen, and was without a conswain. The Kaiser made his way aft over the knees of the carsmen and took the steering reins. Seating himself, he called to his suite to get on board, and they scrambled into the boat in obedience to his command. The excess of energy and lack of ceremony with which their embarkation was accomplished evoked a volley of cheers from the spectators, which the Emperor acknowledged by touching his naval cap. When the boat put off it made straight for the royal yacht Hohenzollern, commanded by the Emperor's brother, Princ Henry of Prussia, which was anchored in the harbor. At the moment the Emperor boarded the Hohenzollern, the warship Moltke, which was lying near the Hohenzollern in mid-harbor, fired an Imperial salute, and the other warships present dipped their colors.

After remaining a short time on board the Hohenzollern, the Emperor boarded a steam launch and went to Holtenau, where he minutely inspected the sluters and every other detail of the canal. From Holtenau he went to the south shere of the canal, and critically scanned the skeleton framework of the Niobe banquet ship. ready by June 21. You must hurry it along." He criticised with great freedom the figures which are intended to adorn his pet structure and then crossed to the north shore, where the keystone of the canal is to be laid. The sun was burning hot, and everybody was perspiring. The Kaiser, feeling the heat intensely, sent an officer to see if he could find some champagne There was a small inn near the sluice, but its proprietor was unable to fulfil the Emperor's order, a call for champagne being something he was not accustomed to. The Emperor's desire becoming known, the chief engineer of the canal works produced two bottles of wine, which the Kaiser and his party drank as they stood in the lighthouse. After refreshing himself, the Emperor scrutinized the preparations for laying the keystone, and personally tested the solidity of the wooden platforms from which it is proposed that the guests shall witness the cere monies. Having thoroughly examined these, he gave instruction in detail as to how he wished changes made, and returned to the Hohenzedlern He took luncheon on the yacht, and at 12:30 p. m. went on board the Meteor, formerly the Thistle. The Meteor took a trial spin through the harbor and then started, with the Emperor on board, on a trip through the canal.

Herr von Holstein has for many years been kept out of the highest posts in the public service through his connection with the famous Count von Arnim case, years ago. Nervous manifestations, such as sleeplessness, nervous debility and nervous prostration are in nine cases out of ten "the cry of the starved nerves for food." TO DESTROY PARNELL'S LETTERS. VEHEMENT PROTESTS CALLED OUT BY THE DE-CISION OF THE EXECUTORS.

London, June 8.-The executors of the will of the late Charles Stewart Parnell have decided to destroy his political correspondence. This decision has called forth vehement protests from some of the friends of the dead statesman against the wiping out of valuable historical records. The letters cover the time from the rising of Fenianism to the Home Rule agitation, and include reports of interviews with and communications from Mr. Gadstone, Lord Randolph Churchill, the Earl of Carnarvon and Archbishops Walsh and Croke. These friends maintain that the letters would be certain to reveal many State secrets, which would justify the executors in sealing them up for fifty years, but they hold that they have no right to destroy them. Mr. Parnell's estate promises to pay 18 shillings on the pound.
